

The Secret Menu Index

One page. What the standardized curriculum dropped, renamed, or quietly de-framed — and where each piece went. Companion to The Magick That Never Left. This is a map of the historical record and of what this book covers, not medical advice and not a list of treatments for sale.

祝由 (zhùyóu) — ritual healing, charms and spells. A tested subject of the Yuan state medical academy, its own section on the official exam, beside acupuncture. Status now: not on the menu. In the Menu: incantation and charm work as living practice — built, spoken, tested, worked as spiritual practice, not as healthcare. Same fence as the needles.

十三鬼穴 — the Thirteen Ghost Points. Traditionally attributed to Sun Simiao, indicated for what the tradition called ghost affliction. Status now: several of the points still taught — good points, clinically useful — with the ghosts filed off. In the book: the history, told straight. (The needle work itself stays with trained hands; that line doesn't move.)

禁經 — Sun Simiao's Book of Spellbinding. Talismans, incantations, exorcisms, demon-expelling points, bound into the same formulary as the 45-ingredient prescriptions. Status now: read as an oddity, when it's read at all. In the Menu: the spellbinding material worked as ritual practice.

符 (fú) — talismans. Sigil technology with two thousand years of documented construction logic. Status now: filed under folk religion. In the Menu: construction, step by step — you build one, you charge one, you log what happens.

Wǔ Yùn Liù Qì — the five movements and six qì. The tradition's own timing model, in the medical classics themselves. Status now: elective at best. In the Menu: a variable you test — run your workings timed and untimed, keep the diary, compare.

Zǐ Wǔ Liú Zhù / Líng Guī Bā Fǎ — timing acupuncture. The calendar applied to the channels. Status now: survives in some streams, stripped of its cosmological frame. In the book: the history and the frame. (Clinical application stays clinical.)

Bāzì, the birth chart. The birth chart under the intake form — how the old doctors read constitution before they read symptoms. Status now: gone from curriculum. In the Menu: reading your own chart the old way — constitution first, then how the tradition read it. Practice, not healthcare.

Divination as pattern perception. The I Ching and its cousins read through the medical-cosmological frame — pattern-reading, not fortune-telling. Status now: carved out of medicine entirely. In the Menu: a full casting protocol through the medical-cosmological frame — cast, read, act, log.

Cultivation as the practitioner's floor. Qigong, meditation, ritual hygiene as the daily core, not two electives. The instrument comes before the formula. Status now: a side hobby students get around to eventually. In the Menu: the daily drills, small enough to actually do.

The framing itself. The cosmology that held all of the above as one project. Status now: swapped for materialist language in 1950-something and called the original. In the Menu: loaded as a working paradigm — chaos-magician style, belief as equipment — and tested.

The free chapters tell the history. The Secret Menu is where you do the work: one complete working per month — framed, built, timed, tested, logged — plus the growing archive. $25 a month when it opens; a founding-year rate at launch. No specific results are promised; the log exists so you can judge the practice for yourself. Nothing in it is medical advice or a substitute for care, and the needle stays with trained hands. Subscribers hear first.

In Ontario, acupuncture is a regulated health service, delivered without supernatural claims and with no guaranteed results; divination, Reiki, Qigong, and ritual are separate, are not regulated health services, and are not offered to diagnose, treat, or cure any condition.
